News to your ears

made aware and encouraged to make sure everyone who should, does have access.

A number of retirement homes tune into the station, which broadcasts from the Levin studios, over 120 hours every week. The not-for-profit organisation has been in operation since 1985 and receives the lions' share of it's funding from NZ on Air, with grants and subscriptions making up the balance.

Being "Print Disabled" doesn't mean you have to miss out on latest news and information thanks to a dedicated team of mainly volunteers who make up the Radio Reading Service of New Zealand.

Anyone who, for whatever reason, is unable to see, understand, hold or access everyday printed literature can now access the latest newspapers, magazines, periodicals and other up to date information by tuning into the service.

Adrian Kealy of NZ Radio for the Print Disabled Inc is concerned some people who would enjoy and benefit from the service are unaware it exists. He believes family and carers need to be

There are a number of ways to access the Radio Reading Service both digitally and by tuning into 107.3MHz FM or 1602KHz AM.
