Kaibosh Food Rescue may not be a household name in Kapiti and Horowhenua, but many households literally receive the fruit of their labour.

Founded in 2008, Kaibosh is a registered charity and the first in New Zealand to 'rescue' quality surplus food from local businesses, sort and check it for safety and quality before passing onto charities who redistribute it to people in need.

KAIBOSH

Putting food on the table

In March last year the Kāpiti and Horowhenua branch was born. Since then the Kaibosh team of volunteers have rescued 35,891 kg of food in Kāpiti and Horowhenua, have provided the equivalent of 102,546 meals to local people in need and reduced carbon emissions by 12,956 kg.

Food is only accepted from licensed food outlets and professionally catered events, not from individual homes. Kaibosh works to the highest food safety standards. Food must not be expired, open, old or in anyway used or contaminated.

The organisation is extremely grateful to the businesses and individuals who support their cause, whether donating food, volunteering time or financial support.
